What kind of income tax deduction can I claim?

If you itemize deductions on your federal income tax return, the Internal Revenue Service allows you to deduct the "fair market value" of in-kind donations that are clean and in "good used condition or better" to qualified charitable organizations.

The IRS defines "fair market value" as the price an item would sell for in a thrift shop. While Goodwill is prohibited by law from actually putting a dollar value on your receipt, we are allowed to provide the following list of average Goodwill store prices as a guideline for you.

If you donate items of exceptional quality or value, check with your attorney or tax advisor for advice.
